'This is justice for Julia'

Life in prison for killer of Peace Corps woman

By Melvin Geron
Inquirer Northern Luzon

IBANUE, IFUGAO—JUSTICE CAME YESTERDAY for Julia Campbell, a Peace Corps volunteer who gave up a journalistic career in the United States to work with the poor in the Philippines but found death instead on a deserted mountain trail in Ifugao.

A judge found 25-year-old woodcarver Juan Donald Duetagan, the lone suspect in the April 6, 2007, killing of Campbell in Ifugao village, guilty of murder and sentenced him to life imprisonment.

Duetagan, wearing a striped prison shirt, bowed his head in his jail escort and threw his hands for handcuffing after the decision was read out to him in English in open court.

But he added as the verdict was read out in Ifugao.

"This is justice for Julia," Prosecutor Reynaldo Aguirre-mendez told The Associated Press by telephone. "But justice can only compensate, it cannot bring her back to life."

Judge Roderico Pineda of the Regional Trial Court also ordered Duetagan, a father of three, to pay the family of Campbell P50.7 million in actual and moral damages.

SC: Use of Filipino in courts 'positive'

By Margen C. Ortiz

SHOULD THE SUPREME Court's latest project succeed, the poor may no longer have to struggle with the English language to express themselves in court.

Initial efforts to use the Filipino language in court proceedings have yielded encouraging results, Supreme Court Chief Justice Reynato Puno yesterday said.

"We are trying to place the use of the Tagalog language [from which Filipino is based] in Belacan and the result is very positive," Puno told reporters at the high tribunal's "Forum on Increasing Access to Justice: Bridging gaps and removing roadblocks" at the

No sign of toxic leak; schools of fish swim around ship

Customs men reward selves with P500M; JPE seeks DOJ probe

By GIC Cabacongen Jr.

MANILA—JUAN PUYO SINGLES IS asking the Department of Justice to investigate Customs Commissioner Napoleon Meneses for lavishing P500 million on himself and hundreds of customs executives and employees last year as a reward for outperforming the bureau's collection targets for 2006.

He said Meneses and the Bureau of Customs (BOC) personnel did not deserve to get the reward because the jump in revenues was due to advance payments by oil companies and not through their efforts to clamp down on smuggling.

"In my experience in other cases, it really goes licky once you enter the water. But here, it's not like that," said Jeyel, who took shots of the outcropping area of the vessel and inside it through broken windows.

Subena, hired by the ferry's owner Redpines Lines, was not to drill small holes into the ship's cargo hold last year yesterday to get water samples inside for testing in Manila.

A report on Friday that the ferry carried endosulfan prompted authorities to suspend operations to retrieve hundreds of bodies believed trapped inside the 23,800-ton ferry when it ran into powerful waves.

Debate on endosulfan ban can wait, says gov't

By Christine O. Asendado
and Norrison Bordenado

THE GOVERNMENT IS IN NO rush to decide whether endosulfan should be banned in the country following renewed interest in the issue prompted by the discovery of a cargo of the toxic pesticide in the sunken MV Princess of the Seas.

Malacanan has ordered the Registrar and Pesticide Authority (RPA), an attached agency of the Department of Agriculture, to review the use of the insecticide chemical in principle plantations.

Agriculture Secretary Arthur

Yap yesterday said the priority now was to retrieve the pesticide from the sunken ship.

"The policy decision on whether to continue using it or not can wait for maybe a week or two," Yap told reporters at Villamor Air Base shortly before President Macapagal-Arroyo arrived from a 10-day US visit.

"The priority right now is to get the shipment out first," he said of the 10 metric tons of endosulfan in a container when the ferry carried.

Yap pointed out that endosulfan was being used in 20 countries and the Philippine "never

GMA flight 1st to land at Naia 3

BACK FROM THE RASH, President Macapagal Arroyo landed yesterday at the newly built Naia 3 International Airport Terminal 3 and ordered it made ready for commercial use in weeks.

Located in a legal tender for six years that delayed its use, Naia 3 will finally be open to commercial flights in three weeks and be a landmark. (Diplomats, on the other hand, already arrived last night, according to Michael Debesa, newly appointed head of the presidential task force assigned to open the airport.)

Mr. Arroyo and other government officials in a Philippine Airlines flight from San Francisco landed at 2:30 a.m. yesterday, the first time the facility was used by a commercial flight.

Radios reports said the President inspected customs, immigration and baggage assessment and told officials to make some improvements.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ramos made it clear that yesterday was not the official opening of the airport but a "dry run because we want to see the airporting system."

"The President wants to see how things are... if it is not the legal aspects are finished, then we can finally open the airport to the public," Ramos told reporters.

RP needs reliable, safe and cheap ferry service

THE SINKING OF MY PRINCESS OF THE SEA, which was carrying more than 100 passengers, calls to mind two tragedies, among others, that the world's worst in recent times. MY Princess was on route from Tacloban City to Manila in October 1987 when it collided with an oil tanker and sank in a "sea of fire," killing over 4,000 people.

In October 1988, the 300 Doko Mariposa sank amid stormy weather while on its way from Manila to Tacloban City, claiming around 200 lives. In September 1998, the MY Princess of the Ocean sank, while sailing from Cebu City to Manila, killing more than 100 persons. All three ships were owned by Sulphur Lines. In all three accidents, the fault was placed on the captain's responsibility (Inquirer, 6/23/98).

Yes, Congress seems oblivious to the fact that the Philippines is an archipelago of about 7,000 islands whose residents need to travel frequently by the cheapest mode in search of livelihood, in pursuit of commerce, or simply to satisfy their wanderlust. In the face of our frequent experiences with sea tragedies, it would be wrong to remain silent and do nothing to improve our shipping conditions. Congress should be encouraged for the benefit of the public.

The government should introduce a reliable, safe and cheaper inter-island ferry service just like other countries with large coastal or island communities.

Over Canada, with its limited coastal population and a large number of islands, there is a reliable, safe and cheap inter-island ferry service. With our more tropical coastal destinations, the ferry service is urgent and necessary even as it could be profitable. Along with the establishment of a government-run inter-island ferry service, the Philippine Coast Guard should be strengthened.

We challenge Congress to enact legislation for the establishment of a government-run inter-island ferry service and the modernization of our coast guard.

For funding, from either using income from MMT, tourism and Property Tax or the low-income intelligence funds will also be a big help.

—WILSON BERNAL, Manila, Philippines

We got "lucky" I CAN'T IMAGINE how they on the last week of June 2007, one of the results of Sulphur Lines got stranded while on its way from Cebu to Manila. The passengers had to stay in the island for more than 24 hours. You can just imagine the experience.

Nevertheless, I just finished myself and my fellow passengers ferry because they were in a position that we, I think, the government should look on the shipping firm and find out the responsibility of their ships and their capability to carry passengers safely and comfortably. Since then, every time I go to Cebu, I never take a Sulphur Line.

What US junket reveals in a time of hardship

I READ THE EDITORIAL TITLED "MORE USE, please," (Inquirer, 6/22/08). The worldwide of the 1990s further highlighted by the fact that the country is reeling from the disaster brought about by Typhoon "Frank." The money being spent on this junket could have been put to better use for disaster relief operations.

Also, at a time when congressmen should be with their constituents to help them get through the difficulties brought by the typhoon, they are instead jockeying with President Macapagal-Arroyo in the United States. The congressmen of these congressmen should remember their officials' core mission: to serve and protect their people.

The junket shows (2008) and her official lack of concern for and concern for the welfare of the Filipino people during times of crisis.

Fewer fish for Ilonggos with 77 sunken vessels

By Cuts P. Gomez
 Inquirer Staff Writer

BALEKID CITY, TUPRAN—“There’s just left behind, not only thousands of dead fish, but also thousands of the fishing industry in Western Visayas.”

Of the 220 fishing vessels registered in the region, 77 sank or were damaged at the height of Typhoon Parang, said Bureau of Fisheries and Aquaculture Extension Director General Dr. Robert Chongco.

Before the start of the 77 vessels, some 300 boats and the rest from Negros Occidental.

The vessels had caught some in Southern and Western Visayas since the start of the typhoon in a conventional direction, the said.

However, these suddenly turned and hit the fish farms of these vessels, he said.

The loss of the fishing vessels would result in a 33 percent decline in the commercial fish catch of the region, he said.

Western Visayas, which also serves the fish requirement of Metro Manila, had a fish catch of 113,000 metric tons last year, he said.

The commercial fish catch of Negros Occidental rose during the same period, reaching 30,467 metric tons.

He estimated the loss of large fishing vessels to be between P20 million and P30 million.

In Cebu City, Mayor Salvador Duterte placed the damage to the fishing industry at P300 million.

The damage would affect almost 40 percent of Negros Occidental’s fish catch, he said.

Meanwhile, 31 bodies of missing fishermen in Samar, Cebu, fishing vessels that sank at the height of Typhoon Parang have been found, said Cebu City Vice Mayor Benigno Alano on Monday.

He added that 87 fishermen from his area remained missing.

MANILA—LOCAL OFFICIALS ASSAILED the Department of Labor and Employment’s findings that cleared the construction arm of a Korean shipbuilding company of any liability on the death of a worker at the firm’s shipyard on June 20.

DOLE has declared the death of a worker and the injury to four of his co-workers as a case of “force majeure.”

Travel firms for Korea and local offices in the region sought shelter from the strong rain at the work site of the Hanjin Heavy Industries & Construction Philippines Inc. in Iloilo, Zamboanga.

The DOLE report said “fatal inspection showed that there were no safety factors that caused the collapse of the wall from other than rising water.”

But Commission Judge Carlos de Reyes said the DOLE report, although accurate, does not go far enough.

“Negligence (displays) from inspection on-site,” he said.

“If there was a strong storm and safety demands that work be temporarily stopped, then Hanjin must stop work,” he said.

DAVAO CITY—Police and military forces have sealed off a small island in Siargao in Davao del Norte following reports that three Peoples Army soldiers who attacked two police stations on Saturday night have been released.

Senior Capt. Simeon Dizon, operations chief of the regional police in Davao City, said the NPA rebels’ two motorized boats suffered engine trouble and failed to join their comrades in their island, and instead docked on Lapidian Island.

A team of officers have been sent to the island to secure arrested suspects dropped by the rebels near the shore.

Two heavy helicopters equipped with machine guns were also hovering over the island to ensure there would be no escape route for the rebels.

At 7:00 a.m., the listing of the ship, which he estimated to be 12 degrees at the port (left) side, became more pronounced.

Order to abandon ship

It was also then that he was told by the ship's second engineer to get up and prepare to abandon ship.

At 11:00 a.m., he heard the ship's captain, Capt. Francisco Maricao, order passengers to prepare to abandon ship.

Shortly after that, at 12:11 p.m., he saw the ship's crew members on the deck.

Gilg also said the captain of the shipwrecked ship was not on board. He said the ship's engine never cooled out, and the ship's power was never cut off.

The same scenario said he and other people survived a life raft, but were they were in the sea, it was very hot for him.

He also recalled seeing about 300 other passengers also jump, and said he thought the other crew members might have been on the engine room at the time the ship was listing.

Once in the water, he said he tried but failed to climb aboard the two other life rafts. He also recalled in climbing aboard the first raft because there were already people there.

Cigarette ad ban in media starts today

By Kristine L. Masid

BEGINNING TODAY, CIGARETTE ADVERTISEMENTS are banned on television, radio and print in accordance with the Tobacco Regulation Act of 2003 or Republic Act No. 9211.

Dr. Markon Lagana, executive director of Framework Foundation on Tobacco Control, Alliance Philippines (FACAP), said the total ad ban on cigarette would be a tremendous help to health advocates who are working to discourage teenagers and young adults from smoking.

"Starting today, cigarette ads will be banned in all forms of mass media," she said. "This is a big thing to do because young people are the target of the ads."

Roberto del Rosario, advertising executive and FACAP board member, said the prohibition on cigarette advertising would save millions of Filipinos from tobacco-related diseases. He said that cigarette firms were "looking" for the public's sins.

"If you notice, print advertisements convey a fun and enjoyable lifestyle, which is first, the tobacco industry's tactic that smoking causes agonizing ailments like emphysema, lung cancer, etc. And then [additional] enjoyment to this is a true [epitome] of a pleasant lifestyle," he said that the tobacco industry is looking for replacement smokers for those who have already died.

"There are already too many young Filipinos who smoke—we don't want this number to increase. Instead, we have to protect millions of children. That is why a total ad ban is imperative," Del Rosario added.

According to the World Health Organization (WHO), between 40,000 and 100,000 children pick up the habit every year. Half of the cigarette smokers started by cigarette advertisements.

The Western Pacific region—which covers East Asia and the Pacific—has the highest smoking rate with nearly two-thirds of men smoking. Cigarette consumption is among the top 10 activities in Cambodia, Indonesia, Malaysia, Burma (Myanmar) and the Philippines.

According to the WHO, in three cigarettes consumed worldwide is smoked in the Western Pacific region and a quarter of its youth population could die from smoking.

12th Week in Ordinary Time
St. Augustine's Mass

Lectionary: Am 3:1-4; 4:13-14
Gospel: Mt 6:25-34

August has become the month for the harvest. Without sowing a seed, you can't have the fall, with wheat growing in the field, Jesus was saying.

They were his and said, "Lord, we are not an idle" but Jesus answered, "Why are you so afraid, you of little faith?" This is what Jesus wanted to tell them and it is a message for today.

The people were amazed. They said, "What kind of man is this who calls the winds and the sea obey him?"

Commentary

The image of the Lord being loved and served by the winds and the sea is very much an image of the Church. The Church is the light of the world, without which we would perish. And even though the Lord may be called the world's owner or even be called the world's king, we know that the Lord Jesus is a humble man and that He will make use of this power to free the world from sin.

Why are the winds and the sea obeying the Church? The Lord is its captain, it is His duty that He will lead the Church to the harbor of life.

Israel accepts deal to swap prisoners for dead soldiers

JERUSALEM—ISRAELI GOVERNMENT agreed Sunday to make one of the most sensitive moves in its history, a Lebanese minister, for the bodies of two Israeli soldiers whose cross-border capture led to a deadly battle in the north. The deal was announced in a meeting with the Lebanese militia Hezbollah in October 2006.

After a wrenching national debate that drew Israeli officials, including Prime Minister Ehud Olmert and Defense Minister Ehud Barak, excepted the deal, the Cabinet voted 23-0 to trade the prisoners, Israeli forces, along with four other Lebanese, for Hezbollah's and Hamas' bodies.

"Despite all hesitations, after weighing the pros and the cons, I support the agreement," Olmert was quoted by his spokesperson as saying in a statement in the evening. "The Israeli security was that the soldiers were alive. Now we know with certainty there is no chance that they are alive."

The spokesperson added that Olmert said, "There will be much sadness in Israel, much frustration considering the celebration that will be held on the other side."

Indeed, within minutes of the decision, at 10:00 a.m., the Hezbollah television station, which is an extension of the group's power, "After happened in the prisoner area to prove that the words of the statement is the most truthful, sincere and sincere," Hezbollah executive council chief, Hassan Ballal, was quoted as saying. The July 12, 2006, 10:00 a.m. Hezbollah live broadcast that reported the new soldiers was almost as exciting, featuring clips of the group's victory in the battle and the arrival of other Lebanese bodies.

DOF says public sector surplus target still attainable

THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE (DOF) said the public sector was still likely to meet the target of printing a net budget surplus of P24.8 billion this year despite unexpected losses incurred by the National Power Authority.

DOF Commissioner Rodolfo B. Alcala said P24.8 billion is the net target, or more than double the P12 billion target set last year, largely because of the increase in the buying price of oil.

However, Finance Undersecretary Edilberto said NPA losses could be offset by the expected improvement in the fiscal performance of other state-owned firms, which means the 2008-09 public sector budget surplus was still attainable.

The public sector's budget position is the sum of the companies and entities managed by the national government, local government units and state-owned firms. It is one of the indicators used to measure a country's financial health.

The Budget Review by Philippine, Inc. (BRI), is expected to reveal this year's net loss of P24.8 billion last year. The national budget's losses were attributed to its intervention in the firing, mortgage market, specifically by buying dollars, to temper the sharp appreciation of the peso last year.

"The public sector is still in risk in 2008. It is likely to be budget surplus this year. The peso has started depreciating and the financial performance of the DOF is expected to improve," Rodolfo said.

The surplus targeted for this year, however, is lower than the annual surplus of P26.33 billion last year.

Finance officials expected the surplus to decline this year because of the need for the national government to spend more on social services and infrastructure. Saving public spending was identified as one of the measures that will help the economy withstand the effects of lower global demand for exports and rising commodity prices.

The reference increase in NPA losses were not taken into account when this year's P24.8-billion public sector surplus was set.

Rodolfo said other state-owned firms were also expected to post higher losses this year as a result of measures implemented to accelerate spending.

BR eyes P9B from tax cheats

65 of 76 tax assessment cases won

By Michele N. Sison

THE BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE said it would keep up efforts to collect this year the nearly P9 billion in back taxes of delinquent taxpayers who lost their court cases against the tax agency last year.

In a statement, National Taxpayers' Committee President Gabriela Calabina said this was expected to boost the agency's revenue collection this year.

The BRI was believed to collect P9.4 billion in lost court cases, or 65 percent higher than the P7.2 billion it collected in cases collected last year. After falling short of its P7.2-billion goal last year, the BRI is expected to make an impressive collection performance this year.

Calabina, head of the BRI's legal department, said the bureau was last year 65 of the 76 tax assessment cases it filed in court. The cases were filed in 2007 in 14 different courts across the country. The cases were filed against the BRI's legal department, which is the BRI's legal arm.

Calabina, who also serves as BRI's chief in charge while Commissioner Lito Tullia is away from the country, said the tax bureau also filed last year 27 tax cases against delinquent taxpayers.

Winning these cases means the BRI is expected to get P4.1 billion in tax revenue this year.

"The BRI is not in a position to file tax cases against a delinquent taxpayer last year and may not again this year due to a limited revenue shortfall in 2007," Calabina said in the statement.

Fiscal technocrat, Calabina said, referred to the BRI's tax program approach of collecting tax collections. She said the agency's approach was to improve taxpayer compliance and improve efficiency of tax collection.

Inefficiency in the tax collection system, Calabina said, was one of the reasons for the BRI's revenue shortfall last year.

The agency, however, said unexpected macroeconomic events, such as the drop in interest rates and slowdown in inflation, were a big factor in its efforts to achieve its target.

Lower interest rates could result in the decline in the collection of taxes on income from bank deposits, while slower inflation could mean a drop in the collection of sales taxes.

The agency, however, said the highest part of the BRI in the second half of last year, did not mean to take full responsibility for the BRI's full year tax shortfall.

Last year's shortfall was the result of the BRI's revenue target of P10 billion in 2007. The target was set by the Department of Finance, which is the BRI's parent agency. The target was set by the Department of Finance, which is the BRI's parent agency.

Alliance Tuna buying another cannery this year

By Elizabeth Santos-Lacina

FROM FROM A RECENT PURCHASE OF a cannery in Indonesia, Alliance Tuna Exporters Inc. (ATE) is preparing for another acquisition in Southeast Asia.

Alliance Tuna president Jonathan Dore said the company would likely acquire one company either in Vietnam or Thailand this year.

Dore said Alliance Tuna would be looking for a cannery with a strong market share in the target region.

"Our core business is growing steadily by 20 to 25 percent a year. With the Indonesian business coming in, growth will likely be at least double that year," he said. He said it is because a new level company has been in place to make some more and that's why we keep on looking for more acquisitions," Dore said.

Alliance Tuna has been a subsidiary in Indonesia, called PT International Alliance Tuna.

The board, which was recently approved by the board of Alliance Tuna, now after the company bought the assets of PT Kardinia Tuna, a tuna cannery in Biting, Indonesia.

The investment in Indonesia remains active in the world's most active fishing grounds.

Rina reaps the sweet rewards of yoga

By Ayu R. Homan
Contributor

RINA-ORLA, Founder Yoga Center Manila
studio director and founder

IT'S BECOME A JOKE OF WORDS among students in the Yvonne Yoga Center Manila (YVCM) that when studio director and founder Rina Orla is teaching, and she decides to straighten you out, you're in for some surprises. "I don't know where that hand came from," says teacher Rocky Villalona with a laugh after Orla catches his arm behind his back. Guadalupe, waiting there more patiently behind his back, something he can't quite do on his own because of stiff shoulders. "Pining it wasn't my fault!"

In fact, the classes are sometimes punctuated with shrieks and gasps of "Oh my God, I did it," when students come into a handstand or headstand, with the aim, said the Orla, sometimes literally lifting them off the floor. "Don't worry, I'm stronger than I look," she says.

It's the strength, both physical and inner, that Yvonne yoga has given this 38-year-old former entrepreneur, creative designer, and sustainable art collector. It is also the strength that allowed her to persevere and open YVCM in September 2004, with the blessings of her longer himself, several yoga master and founder of the school of yoga.

Orla discovered this practice and eventually found a studio about 10 years ago, and then looked back on it.

"It finds my soul," says this mother of two (Katherine, 11, and Jeremiah, 11) and wife of another yoga teacher. "I used to be a different kind, and I found this to be the most solid, the true guidance, but you make your own path, so you must listen to yourself, you become involved and also independent. After all, if you're not listening, it's about your vision, but you listen with someone else, it's very uplifting to be able to help yourself."

Orla has indeed helped quite a few practitioners learn to help themselves, using everything from candles and incense to de-protection and tantra through digestive practice. The last years of existence of the center, which is dedicated to the practice of tantra yoga, have been "wonderful." "I don't cry with a laugh. "There are patches where it's good, then things become super-dramatic, as they do when you're running a school, training teachers, and dealing with the students who come."

"There have been 'happy moments,' however, "for developing relationships, and other than the subject itself, that's what keeps you going. You realize you're actually making a small community and relationships are built on a deep level that goes beyond the mind."

What would be the main problem that comes with running a yoga studio in Manila, where a recent yoga lesson has had multiple offerings of different styles opening all over the city? "People can be tricky, but maybe that's culture," she notes. "When you're not sure and you're not sure, and they disappear anyway, you wonder if the problem is you. For the time when's funniest to a fault, the dealing with that has taught me so much about the practice, and not being attached. When Orla says "my students," which is what she calls her (yogi) instead of my students, I have a feeling he knows (the moment I needed).

Having worked since she was 17—the school food and instrument management in Switzerland and worked in France for a while—Orla does understand the need to be financially viable. "But I have learned to accept that maybe, for some people, this is not their thing. I've learned to respect their time, and it's not my business."

Lately, Orla admits, she doesn't quite need to worry about finances, since the studio is still sustaining and she has her husband's full support. "I guess that's what our intention was pure, and there's no additional side of anything else, so that works for me."

Before, the studio could be closed for a month from the end of June to early August, as her teachers Orla wanted to travel for Pinar, India, to train with the founder family, in the workplace of Yvonne yoga.

That may seem like a bad business decision, but it's one that will put Yvonne's students and the students in the long run.
